What is it? How does it work? What can it tell us? An introductory talk covering the basics of XAS science. Everything from how the x-rays are produced and filtered to what is measured. This lecture will include how a beamline is set up and what considerations a scientist should think about before carrying out an experiment, as well as what kinds of analysis can be performed after the data is collected.