Overview

On March 30, 2010, a new era of particle physics began with the first collisions at CERN’s Large Hadron Collider. The Large Hadron Collider will explore higher energies and shorter distances than ever before and will hopefully answer some long-standing problems in fundamental physics. In this talk, I will review the Large Hadron Collider, its experiments and the physics questions it will address.