Homo sapiens have remarkable capabilities for long distance overland travel. We will discuss the evolutionary development of these talents and the modern emergence of endurance running as a popular sport around the world. Finally, there will be a review of contemporary ideas in exercise physiology and training methods — all just in time for the annual SLAC run.