An interesting and important measurement for a particle physics experiment is Bose-Einstein Correlations, which describe the correlation between identical bosons as a result of the bosons’ being described by Bose-Einstein distribution. This talk will explain where Bose-Einstein Correlations come from, how and why experiments do early measurements of the Bose-Einstein parameters, and what tricks (and useful insights) can be found in the measurements.