Galactic Halo Dark Matter in White Dwarfs

This week's issue of Science includes a paper reporting new results from a survey of some of our galaxy's oldest white dwarfs.

California Is Energy-Thrifty?

Hard facts that debunk some of the current assertions about our energy crisis from this week's issue of science beat the Berkeley Lab's electronic newsletter for non-scientists.

Science Question of the Week: (from Quirks and Quarks' Science Quiz)

From Ron Lees, Department of Physics at the University of New Brunswick. Aristotle and Galileo are lab partners in the physics lab and they're having an argument about how different masses will fall at different speeds. So they go off and buy a couple of cans of coke, they drink one, and then they put the full can and the empty can on the top of a ramp and roll them down. The question is which one gets to the bottom first. Answer. (If you got it right, let QuickNews know!)
