Who's the Scientist?

An innovative and funny website of drawings and descriptions of scientists created by seventh graders before and after they toured Fermilab. The before stereotypes were replete with themes of intelligent, geeky unattractiveness. Post-tour, the students conclude that scientists are normal looking people and observe that "The scientists were like me...played sports, hung out with their friends and also did not get straight A's in every subject." Mike Witherell will be relieved to know that "The scientists used good vocabulary and spoke like they knew what they were talking about."

Love and Physics

Schrödinger's Girlfriend: a comedy about subatomic physics for people who can't balance their checkbooks, is playing in San Francisco at the Magic Theatre. A staged reading at the Georgia World Congress Center during the American Physical Society's 1999 Centennial meeting in Atlanta played to a packed house.

Linux Librarian?

An amazing transformation creates a new heroine to fight the evil Empire.
